STAT

17 JAN 1963

We have received a letter from Senator William Proxmire advising us of your interest in the Central Intelligence Agency. We are enclosing a brochure describing the general requirements for employment with us.

We find it difficult to be responsive to requests for advice on how to prepare for a career in intelligence work. This work embraces numerous and widely divergent vocational fields; the common ingredients of their application in our work are the methodology and disciplines of the intelligence process. We are usually interested in young people who have demonstrated academic achievement in international relations, political science, economics, the applied sciences, and foreign languages. In addition, there are frequently openings for junior intelligence analysts or junior editors who have studied English and journalism.

We believe that we should not advise a young person in his selection of a field of academic specialization without some knowledge of his intellectual capacity and his aptitudes and insight into his motivation and career objectives. If we nevertheless suggested courses of study which a young person should take in order to enter our service, there is an implied commitment to offer him employment if he should follow such advice. The changing nature of our personnel requirements, however, and the suitability factors pertinent to the final selection of our employees make it impossible for us to give such assurance. Accordingly, we have suggested to you a broad range of subjects within which you may select those of greatest personal interest. In so doing, you may keep in mind the requirements for preparing yourself for other fields of employment as well.

Your interest in our service is appreciated and we hope that the information supplied above will be helpful to you. If your interest in our service continues, we shall be glad to receive an application from you several months prior to completion of your college work.

Sincerely,

E. D. Echols
Director of Personnel
